In 1999, the Metropolitan Museum of Art's renowned collection of Ancient Greek sculpture was reinstalled in dramatic new galleries. This volume features specially commissioned photographs of these monumental marble sculptures in their new setting, which is beautifully enhanced by natural light. An informative essay serves as an introduction to the Greek sculpture collection and complements the photographs, which feature details as well as overall views of sculptural groups. The images are in black and white, sepia and colour. An illustrated checklist provides informative descriptions of the sculptures from the author's personal perspective.
