The English translation of "L'oiseau Bleu" appeared in 1909, before its original, and was soon afterwards charmingly performed with scenery which was for the most part brilliant apt.

The woodcutter's children, Tytyl and Mytyl, lie in bed dreaming on Christmas Eve, but appearing to wake they get up and watch the party in the great house opposite, which they enjoy as if they were on it. There is a knock at the cottage door, and an old hunch-backed woman enters, rather like their neighbor, Madame Berlingot. She wants the Blue Bird for her little sick daughter, and Tytyl and Mytyl are to find it for her. She is the fairy Berylune, and gives Tytyl a green hat and the magic diamond.

评论

这本书写的很现实，全文的关注点在于寻找象征幸福的青鸟。就像书中所写的，真正的幸福是要从自己的身边去发现，感受；而不是从回忆中，睡梦中寻找，或是去寄希望于过去和未来。无论孩子还是成年人这本书都是值得细细品味的。

书评

"But I haven't got the Blue Bird. The one of the Land of Memory turned black, the one of the Future flew away, the ones of the Night's were dead, the ones in the graveyard were not blue, and I can't catch the one in the forest!" Those in the Memory Land
