From Publishers Weekly

This fun but familiar novel from Green (The Other Woman) follows the seemingly perfect lives of two women—one married with children, one single with a high-powered job—who wish to see how the other half lives, only to have the misfortune to get what they wish for. When Amber Winslow, a wealthy Connecticut housewife replete with wealthy husband, full-time nanny and golden retriever, grows tired of her town's vicious social scene, she responds to British magazine Poise!'s search for a subject to swap lives with one of the magazine's London editors, Vicky Townsley. Serious and successful, Vicky is longing for the husband and children she doesn't have. While both women leave home on a yellow-brick-road quest to find the missing piece of their lives—a sense of purpose for Amber, a suitable mate for Vicky—what they find instead is the saccharine obvious: they already have everything they really want. Green's latest, like her more inspired ventures, is hard to put down, thanks to affable leading characters and interesting, if not particularly revealing, commentary on the cross-Atlantic cultural gap. (June)

围城内外的人都非常痛苦，非常渴望其他人的生活。这本书中讲的就是当代白骨精和yummy mummy直接交换一个月生活的故事。在别人眼中那么令人羡慕的生活，在自己看来却那么无聊，令人发疯。记得我有个同事在曼哈顿上班，她住在曼哈顿中心，每天走路去上班，吃饭，娱乐。我问她纽约是不是真像sex and the city一样？她说，只有city没有sex。在纽约的6年期间，她一个男友也没有。听起来好想哭呀。
