STEPHEN CRANE was born on November 8, 1871, the youngest of fourteen children in a Methodist minister's family. His father died in 1880, and his mother raised her children alone. Crane began writing at the age of eight, and wrote articles for the New York Tribune when he was sixteen. He attended a preparatory school, Claverack College, from 1888 to 1890, and spent one semester at Syracuse University.
