Come by here, I have seen their flesh turn yellow and their eyes drop out, their souls slack and dull, then they start talking about how they never felt better and that now life has true meaning, no more hangovers, no more women leaving them, no more shame, no more guilt, it's really great, it's really so great but I can't wait for them to leave, they are horrible people, even when they walk across the rug their shoes leave no mark, as if there was nobody there then they mention God, quietly, you know, they don't want to push you but ... I try not to drink in front of them, I don't want to force them back into that evil place.
