

The Last Miracle

The Last Miracle 下载链接1

著者:Don Watson

出版者:Writers Club Press

出版时间:2000

装帧:9.1 x 6.1 x 1.1 inches

isbn:9780595096978

作者介绍:

He wrote the following lines to address the issue of who he is

THE SEARCHER

Seduced by trails, railways, rivers, open gates, The searcher explores every passage.

His fulfillments are abundant, yet
He enjoys his attainments for only a twinkling - A moment before they slip into history.
The searcher doesn't live in the past,
Nor does he live for the future.
His life abides in the present.
The present is the film through which
The future slips as it becomes the past.
The searcher wouldn't live a predictable life - A life formed of identical days
Linked together like sausages.
The searcher has no more appetite for
Exhumed days than for warmed-over breakfast.
The searcher is a stranger to persons
Not perturbed by quests,
Who can't endure ephemeral pleasures.
They don't know the searcher, for
They can't hear the muse that beckons him.
The searcher is accompanied by loneliness -
A companion that he hates and fears.
To elude loneliness, he seeks solitude.
Sometimes solitude chills his loneliness.
But it always fires his drive to search.
What does the searcher really seek?
Another searcher. A similar soul,
Responding to her own muse,
To share his perceptions and to
Join him in common quests.
But the searcher doesn't know what he seeks.

So he continues to search -
To walk the endless trails,
To ride the jarring railways,
And to drift, beguiled, through open gates.
One day, perhaps, guided by his muse,
The searcher will find the other searcher
Embarked on her own quest.
One day, perhaps, guided by their muses,
The searchers will find what they have sought:
One another.

目录:

The Last Miracle 下载链接1

标签

评论

The Last Miracle 下载链接1

书评

The Last Miracle 下载链接1