One More Bridge to Cross: Lowering the Cost of War shows American units how to take (and cause) fewer casualties in battle. Minimal force can be best projected by highly trained and semi-independent squad-sized units. One U.S. service branch officially shifted over to "maneuver" from "attrition" warfare in the mid-eighties, but none have as yet been willing/able to decentralize control enough to use it at the squad level. Until they do, lives will be lost unnecessarily.
