Played Out is a superbly told story of a Cinderella who didn't fit the shoe in a kind of America ruled by suspect princes. Played Out is played out against a backdrop of one of America's unhappier landscapes. Richards tells the tragedy of Jean Seberg's life and death with sympathy and understanding and it is written in the grand style of a genuine American tragedy. Vincent Price Jean Seberg was forty when a policeman in the 16th arrondissement in Paris discovered her disintegrating body under a crumpled blanket in the back seat of a white Renault. A bottle of mineral water and an empty tube of barbiturates lay at her side. She had been dead for ten days; the police verdict: suicide. How could this have happened? Jean Seberg's life seemed to be patterned on the standard dream of every small town American girl. The daughter of a Marshalltown pharmacist, she starred in her high school plays, did well at her studies, was popular with her friends. At seventeen, extraordinarily fresh of face and ideals, she was selected out of 18,000 candidates to star in Otto Preminger's movie "Joan of Arc". Not since David Selznick went looking for an actress to play Scarlett O'Hara had a talent search stirred up so much world-wide publicity.
