Amy and Cord have been talking to each other about business matters by telephone and computer for two years. When they have a chance to actually meet each other at a business conference, they are excited about the opportunity. When Amy sees that Cord is African-American, she endures a sudden shock, but quickly decides that their racial difference does not negate their honest appreciation for each other as co-workers. They agree not to become personally involved with each other, but when charges of embezzlement arise in Amy's office, Cord is assigned to discover the source of the problem. While Cord is investigating the embezzlement, he himself is framed for the crime by Amy's boss and a woman who wants Amy to marry her son.
