Every year tens of thousands of non-fiction books and hundreds of thousands of articles make it into print. It's a much bigger market than that for short stories and novels, as the competition is less fierce and your chances of success are far higher. There are plenty of options for the enthusiastic hobbyist, the knowledgeable insider, or someone who can simply do their research properly. All it needs is a slice of talent, some determination, a smidgen of self-discipline, and the advice contained in these pages. Topics covered include thinking like a professional writer; developing and honing ideas; findout outlets for your work; research for books and articles; selling your work, and approaching publishers and editors.
