Love and other stories. Is there really any other story but love, the search, the longing, the waiting, the nostalgia, the heartbreak? At first glance, the world that David Drebin presents is mostly the world of the beautiful, the young, the rich, the hip. He constructs this world with exactness, so these images are lush and gorgeous. But beneath the beautiful veneer, these images pulsate with complex emotions. He is a master at creating the perfect balance of reality and artifice. He infuses his images with clues, but gives us no answers. So we wonder. Who are these people? The women are strong and revel in their autonomy even in the throes of heartbreak. The men seem less powerful, haunted almost. What might have happened before and after the moment we see? We are compelled to ponder these intricate images, and the longer our eyes linger the more stories emerge. Sad stories, happy stories, melancholy stories.

We imagine what we want to imagine when it comes to love and other stories.
