Dogs, Fires, Me is Diana Michener's ballad to the light that passes through film to register a world of people and objects that speak as if in dreams. Michener's elegiac photographs map a phenomenological world, a terrain of untilled ground where emotions accumulate in a story without narrative. Many images reappear in unexplained variations, particularly self-portraits which suggest that the self-contained corporeal entity is the primordial filter for all experience. In the words of the artist, 'I want to illuminate the human condition. I think all my work really has to do with wonder: a wonder at the incredible insistence of the human organism to survive.'

for Jim
Dine，粗糙，模糊，现场，有点像培根的画..虚的做爱的同性恋..后面的文章写的很好。
