In January 2001, a scholarly conference was held at the Chinese University of Hong Kong. It was a genuinely global gathering, attracting speakers and guests from five continents and twelve countries. As is usually the case nowadays, virtually all of the arrangements for the conference — including the submission of paper proposals, acceptance letters, planning, scheduling, and hotel reservations — were handled over the Internet. What the speakers generally focused on in their presentations was science fiction — the science fiction of the past and the present, the science fiction of literature and film, the science fiction of America, Europe, Africa, Asia, and...
