This work is a mentor between covers for occupational therapy students entering the research phase of their educational career. The "forest and the trees" of selecting, designing and evaluating research is provided in theoretical and practical detail. Students are guided through literature review, protocol development, outcome measure selection and report writing. The vital skill of constructing reliable and valid instruments is honed in a section on developing questionnaires and surveys. Also, statistics are demystified, with step-by-step procedures for descriptive and inferential data analysis included. Keywords: Occupational Therapy, Occupational Therapist, OT, Research
