"The Moral Leader" is a literature-based course continuously offered at the Harvard Business School for nearly two decades. This text is dedicated to helping students wrestle with their own definition of moral leadership. By drawing on an impressive array of literary material (prize-winning novels, short stories, plays, historical accounts and autobiographies) spanning history, geography, culture and hierarchy, the book allows students to ponder eternal, as well as immediately relevant, moral challenges. In this ground-breaking text Sandra Sucher recreates the Harvard course for every student of leadership and ethics. She emphasizes decision-making and action, guiding the student reader through the theories of moral leadership as well as enabling a unique journey of discovery - individual to every reader. Contemporary case studies, available on the website, illustrate the thought provoking content to ground the text in real-life practice. At times insightful, amusing, challenging and always illuminating, this unique text deserves a place on the bookshelf of every leader, future leader, as well as all who have an interest in leadership today.
