People have always liked changing their environment. We have built roads, bridges, houses, cities, and factories. Some of these "improvements" have damaged the natural habitats of the animals and plants that lived there first. With a captivating text and breathtaking illustrations, author Dave Dobson and illustrator Jim Needham introduce the reader to twelve species of endangered animals and plants. From the beautiful cui-ui to the Puerto Rican parrot, they present the dangers each species faces and suggest ways to restore its natural environment.
