The first thing that Agnes Parker and her best friend Prejean learn at camp is that they won't be in the same cabin. Ugh. Now Agnes is all alone in a cabin full of weird strangers who all know one another already. And to make matters worse, she's stuck with a bunk buddy who's anything but her buddy, and everyone keeps talking about how Prejean is so beautiful and exotic. All Agnes can think is: Good-old-shoots-milk-out-her-nose-when-shelaughs Prejean . . . a beauty queen? What if she starts acting like one? And then something happens that makes Agnes wonder: Has she already?
