British documentary photographer and photojournalist Martin Parr turns his lens on the vibrant metropolis of Hong Kong, where his characteristic take on aspects of modern life continues at times to be both intimate and satirical. This series of images portrays familiar and everyday scenes of leisure, consumption and transit in the city. Food is a central theme, though Parr often seeks out those things which may be curiosities to Westerners. He also has a talent for capturing fleeting moments of simultaneity, wherein individuals, their possessions and actions align in amusing vignettes. His keen and observant eye paints a living portrait of the city, seemingly in a completely new way.

还是挺Parr的，跟墨西哥那本挺相似，只是换了不同的食物，不同的服装，不同肤色的人

最后一张是肠粉呢

除了金魚讓我覺得，因為也是我打算拍的object，但去完金魚街放棄。讓我想到，所以香港的色彩很難捕捉是嗎？
