Supporting the Emotional Needs of the Gifted Parents of gifted children face strange and disturbingly unfamiliar issues because their children are different from seemingly

?average? children. But when they talk with other parents who are dealing with similar situations, they can find comfort, reassurance, and insight. This book describes how parents can establish a guided support group using the well-established SENG (Supporting Emotional Needs of Gifted) model to better understand and help their gifted children. Features Include: ?Clear instructions for establishing a SENG parent support group ?Summary of key issues for parents of gifted children ?Forms for copying and used in presenting ?Reasonable solutions to problems facilitators encounter ?Appendices listing relevant books, periodicals, and Internet resources
