"Douglas Clegg is clearly and without any doubt one of the best horror writers in the business." -Cinescape

The signs all along the desert highway read Come See the Mystew! But some mysteries should remain buried forever.

Charlie Goodrow, owner of the Brake Down Palace Gas and Sundries, tells anyone who stops for a fill-up about the mysterious attraction in back. It's the mummified remains of an ancient legendary flesh-scraper, whose job had been to scrape the flesh off the bones of human sacrifices

"Douglas Clegg is the best horror writer of the post-Stephen King generation!" -Bentley Little When a car filled with teenagers gets a flat tire out in the middle of the Arizona heat, the kids figure they have time to check out the Mystery. Behind curtains, in a glass case, lies a small, withered corpse with very long fingernails. Above it,tacked on the wall, is a sign: Do Not Touch. Do Not Feed.But it has to bea hoax, right? How could the kids know that feeding the Mystery will be the worst mistake of their lives? How could they know that the flesh-scraper is hungry for flesh?
