This moving collection of first-person narratives celebrates the individuality and variety of the Native American experience. Men and women representing many Native

American groups speak about childhood and growing up games and rites of passage, education and learning, tradition and change. This companion volume to Neil Philip's acclaimed IN A SACRED MANNER I LIVE is touching and dramatic, easily accessible to young readers, who will identify with its celebration of universal childhood experiences. Introduction, indexes of speakers/writers and Indian nations, suggestions for further reading, source notes.
