The man who called himself Mr. Greene was purposeful, deliberate, and very, very cold. He had no difficulty getting into the newspaper's garage and putting the device into the gray Honda belonging to investigative reporter Judith Lyles. Then it was just a matter of following her onto the highway and waiting for the right moment to trigger the explosion. After returning from Vietnam a decorated hero, John Pavlak had become a college athletic director rather than joining his wealthy father's business. He was determined to be his own man. Although he and Judith had separated and planned to divorce, John is stunned by Judith's death and devastated when it turns out their four-year-old daughter died with her. He's not the sort of man to wait for the police to bring him answers, especially since he is a suspect himself. Assuming Judith's murder was related to her job, John finds she was working on a story about

Germany and lingering Cold War secrets. One step ahead of the police, he flees to Berlin, determined to find out why his family was killed and, if possible, exact vengeance. The trail will lead him from Germany to the Greek isles and then, disturbingly, back home to North Carolina. The pace is unflagging, and readers will race right behind John Pavlak to the shocking conclusion of his quest.
