Each night, nine-year-old Henry reads to his uncle. One night, the book he chooses is The Story of the Search for the Story -- but it turns out to be nothing but blank pages and loose letters. His uncle sends him off to the library for another copy, and along the way, Henry begins an adventurous journey through the world of books. He meets a number of famous authors and well-known characters from literature, and learns a little about each one as his trek continues. There's a man who likes his stories set in Ireland (James Joyce), a woman who tells of safaris and lion hunts in Africa (Karen Blixen), a man who is trying to hold on to time (Marcel Proust), and others. The last person Henry meets is the Shah of Blah, who explains to him how important it is that everyone be able to write and tell their stories freely.
