A young girl marches through the falling rain, beating on a drum with a rat a tat-tat The sound of her drum draws aunts into the street. And these aren't the ants that want to share the picnic basket. Here they come dressed in raincoats, holding black umbrellas, marching row on row behind the girl with the drum. Maurie J. Manning turns the tables on the popular children's song in a lively picture book that is sure to have children up and marching themselves.
