goods. People in the streets were a tangle of foreign accents and diverse appearances. Great ships and small boats maneuvered through the harbors and rivers. There was smoke and pollution.
Things haven't changed much since 1919. The Hippodrome was one of those buildings that New Yorkers were smugly proud of. It had 5,697 seats. There were nights when sweat, smoke and screams boiled over out of the building and into the alleys and avenues as athletic events of seem-
