You've heard of the electric eel, of course. But did you know that there are many other creatures that use electricity to stun prey, to communicate, and even to locate other animals in murky water? Noted author Caroline Arnold takes us beyond the five senses to meet snout fish, the electric catfish, stargazers, and other species, and to show us how they create and detect electricity to help them survive. Innovative, realistic illustrations show these electric animals in action, completing a fascinating introduction to an unfamiliar world.
