A supplement to core texts for introductory courses in International Relations, Introduction to World Politics courses, Global Issues courses, and courses in International Policy Analysis. Designed as a supplementary reader for basic texts in international relations, this collection of recent, opposing articles on 21 of the most talked-about topics in world politics offers instructors a way to tie together theory and concepts with today's headlines. With its informative yet provocative readings, this book can generate lively classroom discussions by encouraging students to ask questions and think analytically and critically.
