This text puts Sigmund Freud in dialogue with his contemporary Franz Rosenzweig in the service of re-imagining ethical and political life. It explores the theological aspects of Freud's writings and reveals the psychoanalytic implications in the religious philosophy of Rosenzweig's work, "The Star of Redemption". Santner makes an argument for understanding theological notions of revelation in therapeutic terms and offers a look at how this understanding suggests ways of re-conceiving political community. Revelation itself becomes redefined as an openness towards what is singular, enigmatic, even uncanny about the "Other", thereby linking a theory of drives and desire to a critical account of sociality. By bringing Freud and Rosenzweig together, Santner clarifies the connections between psychoanalysis and the Judeo-Christian tradition, and illuminates what it means to be open to another person or culture and to share the responsibility for one's implication in the dilemmas of difference.
