Perhaps no other population exposes the clinician to more moral and legal dilemmas than clients with an HIV-positive diagnosis. In Ethics in HIV-Related Psychotherapy, John R. Anderson and Bob Barret provide a practical decision-making model. The power of this model, in conjunction with realistic case studies and the cutting-edge nature of the ethical issues described, make the volume ideal not only for seasoned therapists but also for those taking graduate ethics courses in psychology, counseling, social work, and related mental health professions.
