The touching, true story of Tulane University's 2005 football season played in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina. New Orleans only college football team was forced to spend four months playing home games on the road, all the while uncertain if home would ever feel the same after the storm. Along the way, head coach Chris Scelfos team learned very real lessons about perseverance and survival. Benjamin Hochman, an award-winning reporter for New Orleans Times-Picayune newspaper who spent the entire 2005 season with the Tulane football team, partners with Scelfo to give readers a vivid, behind-the-scenes look at a turbulent season salvaged by the determination of one coach and the self-discovery of his players.
