This exciting new six part series depicts classic American small arms in training and combat during World War II and the Korean War. Featuring exquisite, high-quality duotone images culled from the US National Archives, these titles present a unique and intimate look at such ubiquitous fire arms as the M1 Carbine and Garand, as well as the valiant 'dog-faced' infantrymen and tank crews who used them. From combat in the forests of France and Germany, to the black sand beaches of the Pacific Theater and Korea, each title contains roughly 100 exceptional images which will provide a wealth of visual information for gun collectors, re-enactors, modellers and historians, interested in taking a new look at some legendary weapons.
