Jean de la Fontaine (1621-95) freely plundered the works of Aesop, Phaedrus, Bidpai and others to transform the world's great fables into charming poems of astonishing originality, wit and verve. Here he depicts lions, frogs, donkeys, rats, insects, birds and wily foxes in situations that reveal the quirks, follies and frailties he observed in humankind. Sins of pride, greed and vanity come under humorous attack - a cunning fox tricks a crow out of his dinner, an arrogant hare loses a race to a steady tortoise, a merry cicada who sings all summer finds herself hungry in winter, and the goddess Juno scolds a peacock, who covets a nightingale's song. But faith in human nature can also be found in poems such as those in which a wolf is saved from choking by a helpful stork, demonstrating an engaging belief in the possibilities of redemption.

书评

这是一本在欧洲十分流行的寓言故事选读，
要不是英语文学课要求，我也不会知道这么一本书。
里面的故事都非常短，以诗的形式来写的
很典型的像中国以前课文里学的乌鸦和狐狸的那个故事，就如封面
很多很短小的故事都赋有寓意，不是很难读懂 可以读出一些东西，发现外国人联...
