Cows falling from the sky, whales exploding, magical shaman masks, boys becoming sasquatches, an earthquake shaking the Space Needle, the myth of the gun that Kurt

Cobain killed himself with, and an albino man-child who could be the next coming are just some of the images in these wild and imaginary stories, all of which take place in the area that arabesques the magical watery landscape of the Pacific Northwest known as Puget Sound. These are a runaway train of stories, images, and people who call the area their home, some bordering on the surreal and some so real you can smell the water.
