When a pair of soldiers faces down deadly enemies together time after time, they become an efficient and deadly team. Kyle Monroe and Wade Curtis, two of the Army's most dangerous snipers, work together like a well-oiled machine. After hunting down terrorists in Pakistan and Romania, always under the official radar, Monroe and Curtis have learned how to get the job done by working together. So when General Robash asked them to take on another extremely important mission, traveling to Indonesia to kill high-level terrorists with connections to Al Qaeda, they knew they were the best two men for the job. But as they're prepping for the mission, Robash has to undergo emergency heart surgery--leaving the men under another's command. Now the paper-pushing Colonel Wiesenger has decided to accompany the men on the mission, and it's soon obvious that three's a crowd. It will take all of the experience and skill the two snipers have to trek through the jungle villages of volatile Indonesia, and stop the terrorists in their tracks. They must kill the terrorist leaders before more innocents, including those of American oil workers, are added to the list of casualties in the war on terror.
