When Ava decides to move to a new town, she thought she would be able to leave her past behind. She joins a support group and it is through this group that she is asked to share her story in the local newspaper. After a reporter is sent to her home, she shares her childhood, college years, and the years that she spent in an abusive relationship. Ava soon finds that telling her story was not a good idea. It is through this article that the life she left behind catches up with her. Now she must learn to stand up and defend herself once again, cope with her past, understand her new love and learn to do what she has never done before: simply live.
