This is an examination of the role of the church and the individual Christian and the inherent conflicts between the kingdom of God and the kingdom of men. The author questions whether Christians have failed to understand the message of Christ and whether humanists have failed to understand the nature of man. He asks to what extent Christians can affect public policy and whether there is a responsible Christian political role. Illustrated with historical and current dramas, the questioning is both pertinent and provocative. Charles Colson has also written "Born Again", "Life Sentence", "Loving God" and "Who Speaks For God?".
