August, 1806: when you have just offended the most powerful men in England, you can stand firm or you can run. Which is why Martin Jerrold finds himself sailing away as fast as the wind will carry him, entrusted with a secret mission to deliver a letter of great importance.

There are rumours of a conspiracy in America and Jerrold's mission will lead him across the American wilderness and deep into the heart of a plot aimed at the centre of government. As he blends into the ranks of conspirators, Jerrold slowly realizes that his very presence could be the spark that ignites a disastrous war between England and America. To add to his problems, Jerrold finds himself shadowed by the enigmatic secret agent 13 and the sinister Mr Vidal, who dog his every step.

To save himself, Jerrold must attempt to prevent the conspiracy. The stakes are high and the very future of the Empire rests in his not-so-capable hands. One wrong move and the consequences would be catastrophic, even by Jerrold's own lamentable standards.
