Her father is a cult novelist and living legend. Her mother is a fashionable socialite. And her brother is the rising star of the LA literary scene. It's no wonder Elisabeth Page feels intimidated. It wouldn't be so bad if her own life wasn't frozen in time. Romantically, she's still involved with her childhood sweetheart - a journalist who she barely sees anymore, let alone trusts. And despite working for one of LA's hottest restaurants, her five-year plan to run her own patisserie has morphed into an eleven-year plan to nowhere. But then she meets Daniel, who finally gives her a taste of how incredible her future really could be - if only she could drop everything and let him see her as she really is... But can Daniel ever be more than just flavour of the month? Elisabeth is about to find out.
