nnie Oakley caught her breath. Striding across the open air was a tall handsome man in elaborately embroidered fringed buckskins and thigh-high leather boots. A diamond winked in the bright silk neckerchief knotted at his throat. "Well, I do declare!" Annie said. With his long brown hair and wide-brimmed Stetson and that droopy mustache and beard, he looked exactly like the pictures Annie had seen in all those newspapers and magazines. But this was no blurry drawing on faded newsprint; neither. No siree. Immediately her heart set to pounding. It was him. William Frederick Cody. Buffalo Bill Cody. Buffalo Bill stopped right in front of Annie.

gallantly¼ and smiled.
\"Well¼ missie!\" he said. \"Let s see what you can do.\"
Annie s husband¼ Frank Butler¼ pressed a long rifle into Annie s hand.
