I guess I should have left it up at the North Pole. But it seemed like such a cool idea -- I had to bring it home with me. I remember thinking that it couldn't hurt to just look at it. That was my first mistake. Thinking. Of course I didn't know what it was not for sure. But it had to be something pretty amazing. "I think it's a time machine," April had said. Personally I thought it looked more like a vacuum cleaner. But I'd rather have a time machine any day. I'd spent a lot of time at the North Pole that January hiding in my grandfather's workshop. great-great-great-Yeah! I mean hiding. I hadn't wanted to be at the North Pole in the first place."
