THE PATRIOTIC HYMN "America" is almost our second national anthem. With countless others I share the love it expresses for "thy woods and templed hills"; the high-lands draw me back again and again. I have seen the first light of morning touch the top of Maine's Mount Katahdin, and watched the sun slip into the Pacific as I stood on Mount Tamalpais just north of the Golden Gate. Most spectacular of all was the midnight sun grazing the northern horizon, viewed from the hard-gained heights of Mount McKinley.

The wooded slopes of our eastern "templed hills" change with every season. Which is more dramatic, the exuberant late-spring bloom of the Smokies or the rich tapestry of autumn on the New England hills? Throughout the year the roads and trails of these venerable, peaceful ranges of the East attract the crowd-weary residents of nearby cities.
