Having spent a good many years as a teacher, I see clearly that education is of critical importance in the rapidly changing conditions in which the world's peoples now live. The task of education is to acquaint people, especially young people, with the total tradition of human thought and experience. Today, however, it is especially important that our minds remain uncluttered and free of the laborious memorization of thousands of facts and figures. Students must keep their minds clear and agile, for their task is to wrestle with the evolving concepts to which all the recently gathered knowledge--generated by new critical insights--is inevitably leading. The valuable facts of the past, accumulated over thousands of years, must be preserved, however, as the basis for new concepts.
