Ernest R. DeProspero, professor and director of graduate programs at Rutgers SCILS, died of cancer on September 16, 1983. The significance of his contributions to the advancement of librarianship will long be felt, especially in the area of measurement and evaluation. Through research, publication, consulting and involvement in professional associations, his influence was international in range. Ernie DeProspero inspired and guided many doctoral students, and he sparked enthusiasm for the potential new directions in research and in creative thinking and teaching which he believed the new SCILS to represent. His zest for intellectual ferment, his vision, and his leadership are warmly remembered and deeply missed.
