This manual of exterior renewal covers not only the main topics of Re-roofing and Re-siding, but also associated items so that homeowners can update their homes to create a weather-protective envelope, reduce annual maintenance, conserve fuel in heating and cooling, and improve the home's appearance and value.

Specific instructions are given so that the homeowner can choose between these alternatives:

- ~ contract the entire job to a remodeling specialist;
- ~ arrange partial subcontracts for the more difficult work, with the owner handling the easier jobs;
- ~ do all the planning and manual work himself.

Different types of financing, contractors, materials and products, and application methods are discussed in detail and evaluated, with over 250 photos and diagrams to aid the handy (or not so handy) person around the house.

You will discover what questions should be asked before beginning a re-roofing or re-siding project; how to conduct an examination of the exterior to determine the damage involved and repairs required; how to evaluate contractors in terms of your needs, and materials to be used in accordance with your budget and home style.

Author Robert C. Reschke is a housing expert, with over 20 years in the trade. He explains re-roofing and re-siding projects in terms the layman can understand.

A contributing editor to Professional Builder magazine, among other publications, he is also the author of HOW TO BUILD YOUR OWN HOME, a Successful book.
