Chris Anastos is a New York City cop. He was assigned to infiltrate a Greek neighborhood in Queens to determine whether there was a link between the Greek and Italian underworlds. As a member of the New York City Police Department Intelligence Division he began uncovering mob corruption, illegal gambling clubs, and drug dens in the city. As Chris the cop, he had a wife and in-laws, nieces and nephews, bills to pay, an apartment in a residential neighborhood

Working undercover, Chris fitted in well with the Greeks and Italians. He was accepted because he was believable. And he was believable because he had become the person he pretended to be. Beyond the dress and mannerisms, the language and the gestures, the way of walking and talking and scheming, Chris felt like a "wiseguy" on his way up. He took part in the deals--he was included in meetings; he entered the world of a Long Island Mafia boss--he was
