AMERICANS DEVELOP A
fascination with business success at an early age. One of the sweetest childhood memories we all share is that first day we managed to drive the kid next door out of a friendly game of Monopoly by putting together a small hotel chain on Boardwalk and Park Place. But recapturing that incomparable thrill is more elusive once we have graduated to the real game of business. It's a tough world out there: the stakes are high, the rules are strictly enforced, and the competition's a little tougher than when you were just playing against your younger brother. In today's business world, if you don't know fundamentals, like how to talk and
