I have written this book because our world needs leaders says Dr Haggai in his Foreword. It is the identification of twelve principles of leadership that sets this book apart from others. These principles are not skills--although skills may be used to enhance them--but they are characteristic those factors that make a leader different from other people. Developing these principles he goes on will help you fulfill the responsibilities of your leadership position in the most effective way possible. To often the author notes books on leadership actually describe personality traits desirable only in the Western world. But the principles he discusses in this book are constants in all cultures--based on
