ON May 29 to June 1 1977 a colloquium was held at the University of Notre Dame entitled Toward Vatican III The Work That Needs to Be Done Some seventyone theologians and social scientists met to discuss central theological issues for the church As the president of Notre Dame Father Theodore Hesburgh CSC reminded the participants in his letter of invitation the title Vatican III was not literal but symbolic Indeed the colloquium was not an official church meeting but was genuinely symbolic of the concern and commitment of Catholic theologians and social scientists to the church in this critical moment of its history The occasion was made possible by the fact that the distinguished international theological journal Concilium decided to hold its editorial board meeting in the United States in order to celebrate the republication by The Seabury Press of the English-speaking issue of the journal after a lapse of two years. Since Concilium was founded twelve years ago to continue the Work of Vatican II, the symbolic and hopeful conciliar theme of the colloquium seemed entirely appropriate to the many participants. At the instigation of Andrew Greeley, a member of the board of Concilium and Msgr John J Egan of Notre Dame's Center for Pastoral and Social Ministry, the plans for the meeting were initiated in the summer of 1976. Hans Kling and Johann B Metz representing the board of Concilium and David Tracy as president of the Catholic Theological Society of America joined Greeley and Egan in the extensive planning for the session. After several discussions, the agenda described below emerged as the best focus for the meeting. Papers were solicited from three groups: theologians from the editorial board of Concilium, theologians from the Catholic Theological Society of America, and a representative group of
