wouldn't miss for the world (and neither would I for that matter) is the familiar nightly session of bedtime reading; exploring exotic lands learning about witches monsters frogs balloons airplanes alphabets lost dogs and people of any description. Last night I chose to read this fair-haired son of mine a children's book appropriately titled "Families." In a very graphici¼E spirited and adoles-the traditional family still exists to some degree. But it is not the predominant model. According to Miriam Galperi¼E author of Joint
