NIGHT LANDINGS
In easy orbits we learned to land night fighters by the numbers.
Line up the propeller cone a thousand feet above the lighted runwayi¼Œ pitch sixty degrees and hold iti¼Œ back pressurei¼Œ back pressurei¼Œ a nudge on the rudder to hold the nose up.
Roll outi¼Œ trusting the darknessi¼Œ drop the landing gear and count one thousand one one thousand twoi¼Œ and turn back to basei¼Œ airspeed fallingi¼Œ nose falling in the turn to finali¼Œ lights of the runway pulling you home like a magnetic compassi¼Œ wings rolling level as the nose liftsi¼Œ the tire-streaked runway dim between the skimming lightsi¼Œ at last the shudder of wheels scudding along on asphalt.
All by the numbersi¼Œ easy.
The night I soloedi¼Œ
red lights rolled flashing into the woodsi¼Œ searching for Penningtoni¼Œ his third soloi¼Œ a nice kid eager for everything. What happened in those seconds approaching the base we only guessedi¼Œ The tower controller reported granting clearance to landi¼Œ watching the T-28 approach and pitch-out steep as it shouldi¼Œ but it kept on rolling in the turn until inverted
